

Tracy Edwards Log Book

26th December - Day 3

Today was grey and cold with a light wind. The barometer was steady though. It is getting cold. It keeps shifting too, so no change there.

We are plagued by these conditions. Is there never going to be a steady strong wind for us in the Race?

Trying to understand the weather pattern around this area is tricky. The big lows of the Southern Ocean do make an appearance but it is mostly a succession of highs preceded by fronts suddenly bursting across us; you can time them almost to the minute - then they are gone.

